THE DEATH OF WILKES BOOTH. Rev. Dr. R. B. Garrett, of Austin, Tex., is said to be the only man living who witnessed the death of John Wilkes Booth. At the time he was about 12 years of age and lived with his father on a farm about a mile and a half south of Port Royal, Va. It was in the elder Garrett's barn that Booth

finally took refuge. "During the night," says Dr. Garrett,
"the soldiers arrived, and my father, hearing a noise, went out to the barnyard. A pistol was placed to his head and he was told to reveal the hiding place of a man he was concealing. My father denied that he was concealing any one, and a rope was placed about his neck. My brother then told them that two men were in the barn. The officers asked the stranger and his companion to surrender, but were met with a stout refusal. Harold finally weaken-ed and came out. Considerable parley-ing ensued, and finally it was determined to fire the structure.

"A wisp of hay was pulled through a crack of the barn and a match applied. In an instant the flam beaped to the roof and a red glare was thrown. around the inside. Through the cracks could be seen the form of Wilkes Booth standing in the middle of the building supported by his crutch. In his hands he held a c. rbine Harold halleft. At this instant Sergeant Corbett, who died in an insane asylum in Kansas two years ago, fired through a crack in the wall and Booth fell to the floor. He said afterward that Booth had his gun to his shoulder and was about to kill one of the officers. This is not so, as I was standing within six feet of Corbet when he fired the shot, and Booth never made a motion to shoot.

"The assassin was dragged from the barn by my brother and carried to the porch, where he died. My mother and sister made him as comfortable as possible, and the family was with him when he breathed his last. One of his long black locks had fallen over his forehead, and this my mother cut off. His last words were: "Tell my mother thought was best.' With this John Wilkes Booth passed away. On his right arm was his name in India ink. This, if nothing else, fully established his identity which has so often been doubted. The lock of hair, or part of it, I have still in my possession. The other part I sent to his mother about ten or twelve years ago."-Boston

A dispatch from Fredericksburg says "The statement that Rev. R. B. Garrett, formerly of Caroline county, now of Baltimore, is the only living witness J. Wilkes Booth's death is denied.
Miss Lucinda Holloway, of Bowling Green, who held Booth's head when he was dying, is still living."

He hooked a big muskalounge, which he finally landed in the boat, and with which he had a struggle for mastery. The inside of a muskalounge's gills are lined with little sharp, hone-like protuberances. little, sharp, bone-like protuberances, and the instant Cooper inserted his bands the fish closed the gills and Cooper could not withdraw his hands.

A fearful struggle ensued between the man and the fish, in the midst of which a swish of the fish's tail knocked the little girl overboard. Cooper was unable to get free and he saw the child drown before his eyes. He finally re-leased one of his hands and killed the tish with a hammer. Sunday he went to Rogers City for treatment and told his story. His hands are much swol-len and poisoned by contact with the gills, and the doctor says it will be a week or two before he regains the use of them. The muskalounge weighed about thirty-five pounds, according to Cooper's story.
